MONDAY, AUGUST 1.

Even in Colorado the 16 to 1 free silver agitation is lagging.

It is not believed that Colonel William J. Bryan will have the chance, as president, to return any captured or ceded territory to Spain.

A Maine Democrat has taken the job of retiring Speaker Thomas B. Reed to the shades of private life. He will know more after election.

Should President McKinley listen to the Denver papers, he will not make peace until Spain and also Portugal have become territories of the United States. The Denver papers want all the free silver countries on the globe annexed to this country.

It may be that Commodore Watson's fleet will not have the pleasure of a jaunt to Europe and of an engagement with Admiral Camara. This is one of the disappointments of the war, for which both the people and the American navy will be profoundly sorry.

Judging from General Shafter's report of the affair, the trouble or misunderstanding which arose between the American commander and General Garcia all came about because the latter wanted to boss the whole show after the tent had been erected without his assistance.

If the blockade of Cuban ports is not raised soon, two or three of the European nations will be compelled to build new commercial navies. The capture of prizes by the Americans has already sadly depleted the carrying capacity of the merchant fleets across the water.

President McKinley's cabinet should learn to flock together more on public questions. Nine different opinions on one question do not indicate much unanimity of thought. It can hardly be possible that the yellow journals are responsible, and yet —

The nervousness which is afflicting a large number of men in the territory at present undoubtedly arises from the fact that an election is approaching and their friends have not petitioned them to run for some good, fat office. The friends are not behaving in a very generous manner.

There appear to be two kinds of tax dodgers in New Mexico—the property owner who dodges the tax collector, and the collector who dodges the tax payer. The latter can be disposed of very easily and one or two examples made by removals would be conducive to a greater and better discharge of public duties.

Richard Croker, boss of Tammany Hall and mayor de facto of New York, is coming home. He has lost largess among the British race tracks and must recuperate. It must be remembered that the annual expenditures of Greater New York under the Tammany regime are between $80,000,000 and $100,000,000.

Senator William Van Amburg Sullivan, of Mississippi, and Editor Connolly, of the Memphis Appeal-Avalanche, had an encounter. The senator's high and mighty senatorial ire cut no ice with the editor and he had the senator bound over to keep the peace in the sum of $5,000, just as if the senator were about as good or as bad as the average citizen. The senator did not like this, but the law was just a little bit stronger than his fire eating propensities.

An Important Step.

The Santa Fe Fruit company has decided to build immediately, and the structure will be much larger than at first contemplated. Instead of being 50 feet long, simply to accommodate the evaporator, it will be 76x32, in order to contain a large modern cider plant run by steam power. The building will be located on the fine property of the company adjoining the depot, where tracks can be run in from both roads. This is the most important event for Santa Fe in many a year. It opens up a new era and adds to the value of every foot of property in town. The projectors who, with rare vigor and persistence, have carried this enterprise to success deserve the thanks of every citizen. They should be sustained in every way. The money to put in the cider making machinery should be subscribed without any delay. Each citizen should put in what he can himself and then see that his neighbors do the same.

The Cerruti Award Case.

The government of Colombia, South America, seems to be in a position where it must either pay up or suffer from the bombardment of its coast towns by Italian warships. The trouble grows out of the political agitation in Colombia in 1885 which resulted in a short lived rebellion against the government. During the revolt Ernesto Cerruti, an Italian, who was at the head of a firm doing a large business in the state of Cauca, Colombia, was imprisoned by one of the warring factions, his personal property confiscated and his business interests wiped out. The Italian government took up the case and first submitted it to Spain for arbitration, but the award was not considered satisfactory and in 1896 the Italian and Colombian authorities agreed to submit the matter to the president of the United States. President Cleveland consented to act as arbitrator, and after a lengthy consideration of the case rendered his award on March 2, 1897, two days before the expiration of his second term. After disallowing the claims for personal damages arising from the arrest and imprisonment, Mr. Cleveland's award for loss of individual property was as follows:

Award $60,000 ($300,000), of which sum $10,000 ($50,000) having been already paid, the government of the Republic of Colombia will, in addition, pay to the government of Italy, for the use of Senor Ernesto Cerruti $10,000 ($50,000) thereof within 60 days from the date hereof, and the remaining $40,000 ($200,000) within nine months of the date hereof, with interest from date at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid, but payments to be made by draft payable in London, England, with exchange from Bogota at the time of payment.

Colombia declined to pay the amount awarded on the ground that the Republic of Colombia will, in addition, pay to the government of Italy, for the use of Senor Ernesto Cerruti $10,000 ($50,000) thereof within 60 days from the date hereof, and the remaining $40,000 ($200,000) within nine months of the date hereof, with interest from date at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid, but payments to be made by draft payable in London, England, with exchange from Bogota at the time of payment.

As Italy's purpose is confined solely to the collection of money which has been awarded by an arbitrator mutually agreed upon and has no territorial accession in view, the Monroe doctrine has no application to the case, but it is governed by the rules which applied to the British seizure of the customs house at Corinto, which was held until a claim for $75,000 was settled. The United States has offered its friendly offices to bring about a satisfactory settlement of the difficulty, but further than this government can not go.

Bismarck.

The iron chancellor, the man who made possible the German Empire and did more than any one man to bring about German unification, is dead. The man of blood and iron was gathered to his father's on Saturday last. He was one of the greatest men of this 19th century. The good that he did will live after him. The evil will be forgotten.

Bismarck was one of the few men who see their life's object attained. For 40 long years he labored for the creation of a German commonwealth under one imperial ruler. This head of the German nation was to come from Prussia and so it came about.

Germany, today, is a great power and becoming greater right along. Sometimes, in the consciousness of its power, Germany, under the present emperor, William, acts haughtily and imperiously; sometimes it acts in an unbecoming and arrogant manner; but upon the whole, the Germany of today is a strong and potent factor in civilization. Germany is one of the greatest powers on earth and the chances are that it will remain so for many years to come.

To a large extent Bismarck was the founder of this greatness. His backbone, energy, sagacity, statecraft and indomitable will power laid the corner stone for Germany's present condition. The kings of Prussia and emperors of Germany were but puppets in his hand until old age, that waits for no man, compelled him to step down and aside. He has now stepped down for good. A great man has gone. But his work will live for centuries to come.

Nothing But Capital Needed.

New Mexico has all the natural resources to make it the wealthiest state in the Union. All that is needed is capital to develop them and that will come in time.

The New Clerk of the Supreme Court. (San Marcial Bee.) Hon. Jose D. Sena is the new clerk of the Territorial Supreme court, and Colonel Frost, who is seldom fooled in men, says the appointment is being received with great satisfaction by members of the bar and by citizens generally throughout that section of country.

A Stab in the Back.

A rumor was extensively circulated over the territory, by some unknown purveyor that Captain Max Luna had been guilty of cowardice in the battles before Santiago. On the contrary Captain Luna's company was in the lead and he has received the special commendations of his commanding officers for his coolness and bravery when in the most dangerous position possible, with the enemy in ambush all around him. All those who took part fought bravely, but none more so than Captain Luna and his men. The heroic soldier boys from New Mexico do not go for a play spoof or an outing, but because of the fire of patriotism that burned in their hearts, and the miserable scoundrel who will make accusations, more unwelcome to them than death itself, is held in detestation and abhorrence by every decent fair minded citizen. Would to God that the name of this base and cowardly calumniator of a brave soldier boy who is away fighting the battles of his country, and powerless to defend his name and honor at home, be learned that he may be held in the scorn and utter detestation he so richly deserves. No words can express the feeling of the people regarding such a cowardly poltroon, and these remarks apply not only to Captain Luna, but to the humblest private who offers his life on the field of battle in the service of his country. The people in this territory who remain at home will see that the honor of our brave soldier boys at the front is protected in their absence.

R. E. Twitchell, President Bar Association.

The 13th annual meeting of the New Mexico Bar Association was held in Santa Fe on Monday. A gratifying feature of the gathering was the unanimous ballot that honored Hon. R. E. Twitchell by naming him as president of the association for the ensuing year. Ralph Twitchell is a bright lawyer and a good fellow, and no Delilah will ever shear him of his intellectual locks.

Congressional Legislation Would Be the Thing.

The SANTA FE NEW MEXICAN has published several long articles from time to time regarding the negligence of county collectors in endeavoring the collection of taxes and the indifference displayed by district attorneys in carrying out the provisions of the statute governing the same. It is a foregone conclusion that unless an improvement is shown in this work by collectors, county commissioners and district attorneys, some urgent remedy, probably in the form of a congressional legislation, will be applied.

A CHANCE FOR CADETS.

Bernalillo County Entitled to an Appointment Each Year. (Albuquerque Citizen.)

The legislative assembly of New Mexico by an act approved February 13, 1895, provided: "Each county in the territory may, through its county commissioners, by competitive examination or in some other manner to be determined by said commissioners, appoint one student annually, who shall, without any charge for matriculation or tuition, receive during the year for which student shall have been appointed, instruction in the regular courses taught in said institute." The citizen has published appointments by the commissioners of several counties. Who will be the fortunate young gentleman from this county to attend the New Mexico Military Institute still rests with our board of county commissioners.

BRAVE, YET IN AGONY

REMARKABLE FORTITUDE DISPLAYED BY EDWARD MARSHALL.

Scorching Trip of the Wounded New York Journal's Correspondent to the Hospital—His Greeting to an Old Friend Singing "The Banks of the Wabash."

The first news of the first battle of the rough riders at La Quasimas reached the camp at Siboney about noon on June 25 last. Before 1 o'clock word had come that Edward Marshall, a correspondent of the New York Journal, had been shot in the spine and could not live through the day unless he was brought to the hospital at once. The messenger explained that the only litters that the rough riders had were all in use, and that there were so many wounded soldiers to be attended to that not more than half of them could be brought in before nightfall. In Marshall's case particularly every moment counted, so George Coffin, the artist; Stephen Crane, H. G. MacNichol and two sailors from the dispatch boat Kanapaha volunteered to go out and bring him. A steward from the Red Cross society and the New York Sun correspondent went with them. Mr. Crane, who had been in the battle earlier in the morning, led the way. It was a scorching day, and the 5 1/2 mile climb over the rugged hills which roll away to within a couple of miles of Santiago made the two fat men in the company blow hard. A narrow road, scarcely more than a bridle path, led to the field hospital, which had been extemporized about 100 yards in the rear of the battlefield.

Marshall and a dozen wounded soldiers lay on the grass. While still some 80 feet away Marshall recognized the voice of one of the men in his party and called out quite loudly: "Hello, old man! This is a funny place for us to meet. Last time I saw you was in London, at the queen's jubilee." As he said this he raised himself slightly on one arm, and we saw that he was puffing away at a cigarette. Seeing this, it was hard to realize that Marshall was a dandy, however, changed that opinion.

As the men placed Marshall on the litter a slight jolt was unavoidable. The wounded man at once went off into a fit, which lasted about 1 1/2 minutes. Two of the men held him down until the agony was over. A touch of morphine revived him quickly, and the procession started onward, with Marshall apparently quite himself again, puffing away at still another cigarette. At this point the correspondent left to go on to the rough riders' camp, a mile farther on. It was agreed that he would be able to overtake the litter after interviewing Colonel Roosevelt.

It took 35 minutes to catch up with the party, but it seemed like ten years. Marshall was sleeping under the effect of another opiate, but as we changed off at the litter he woke and had another terrible spasm. When he was quieted, he began to sing "The Banks of the Wabash." This sounds, I know, like an extract from a Rhoda Broughton novel, but it is true none the less. For nearly half an hour, as we dragged the litter along, Marshall kept repeating the choruses of this song over and over.

When he finally stopped, we could see that either his pain or his morphine, perhaps both, had made him delirious. He clutched Mr. Coffin by the hand, "Coffin," he cried, "I'm on the city deck tonight, and we've got to beat the town on the story of this fight. Between it and the story of my falling down that coal hole and breaking my back ought to make a great paper tomorrow. Have a hansom waiting for me on the beach, and we'll drive down to Guantanamo and knock the devil out of the other fellows."

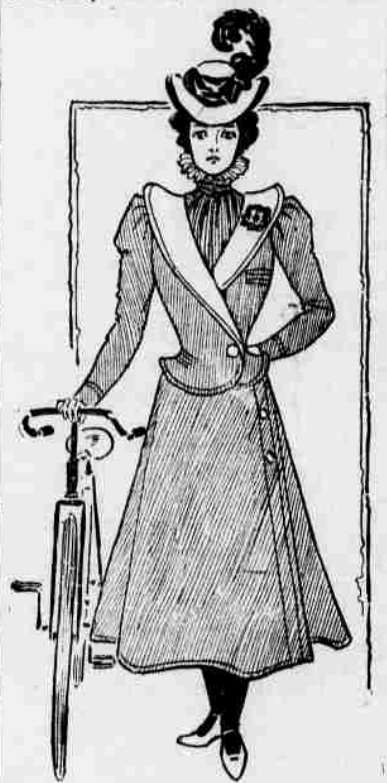

At the end of the fourth mile the two colored sailors who had tramped all the way in their bare feet, collapsed. The Red Cross man and the correspondent decided that the best thing for them to do was to hurry on to camp, secure more help and whisky and get back as soon as possible. Bronson Ren supplied the bottle of whisky, and Mr. Dunwidie and his soldiers volunteered to go out with us and help carry Marshall down the hillside, a steep slant of fully half a mile. In the meantime an officer of one of the colored regiments on picket duty had met the party struggling along about a mile and a half off. He immediately ordered six stalwart negroes to carry the litter.

At 8 o'clock we reached the railroad shed, which had been turned into a temporary hospital, and found it crowded to the doors, but in almost total darkness. Three candles were all the light that the surgeons and Red Cross men had to work by. There wasn't even a torch. As we carried Marshall in and

JUVENILE ATTIRE.

Clothing For Babies and For Little and Big Girls.

Mother Hubbard gowns remain the favorites for little children, as such frocks are easy to make, comfortable to wear and readily laundered. This year, however, there is a revival of the old fashioned child's dress made with a full, baby waist and a little belt, to which the skirt is gathered. A sash is worn with these dresses. White muslin, lawn or raincoat is usually chosen, with colored ribbons and shoes, and the effect is very pretty and childish. There is also a revival of white stockings for children, but this does not meet with much approbation. White hosiery is unquestionably ugly and unbecoming, and children can seldom manage to keep it free from spots for five minutes after putting it on, and when it is soiled few things look more untidy.

The newer grown up girl is the closer does the fashion of her clothing approach that of her mother's attire, but no rich material or magnificent trimming is employed. Unless the girl is unusually tall or fat she wears short dresses up to 13 or 14 years of age. From 14 to 16 the skirt reaches to the top of the boots, and after 16 it is lengthened to the usual dimensions for a young lady.

The cut shows a bicycle suit of suede cloth. The short skirt, lined with silk, fastens at the side. The close coat crosses, with revers of white cloth, closing with a single button. The chemiselet is of pale blue serge, the hat of suede straw, draped with pale blue silk and trimmed with coq feathers.

VARIOUS NOTES.

New Ideas in the Different Departments of Fashion.

Large ornamental combs still remain in vogue, but they are necessarily very light in order not to injure the hair and tire the head. Plain shells are worn for ordinary use, while for dress occasions there are shell combs enriched with silver, gold and jewels.

Tan shoes with black patent leather trimmings are seen for children this year and are very pretty with light frocks. Tablecloths, napkins and centerpieces in the Russian style—that is, of thick linen bordered with heavy, red embroidery—are a pretty novelty, especially for the breakfast and luncheon table.

All light grays are much prized, especially silver and pearl gray, and for walking and small receptions gowns of this color are having a decided success. Lace, embroidery, applications and ruffles of mouseline or satin are the usual trimmings, and white combined with gray gives a charming effect, especially with a touch of color at the collar and in the hat. Blue and green are also favorites this season, and red is largely worn, but requires to be subdued with dark trimming.

The hat illustrated is of mauve straw, and the brim is lifted in front under a mass of violet velvet held by a steel ornament. Around the crown is a tassel of violet velvet and mauve mouseline de soie, forming a large choux in front. A long feather of the argus pheasant emerges from the bow over the hair and curls around to the back.

THE MENACE OF PURISM.

"There is a purism," Whitney said, "which, while it seeks to maintain the integrity of the language, in effect stifles its growth. To be too fearful of new words and phrases, new meanings, familiar and colloquial expressions, is little less fatal to the well being of a spoken tongue than to rush into the opposite extreme," and Professor Lombury goes further and asserts that our language is not today in danger from the agencies commonly supposed to be corrupting it, but rather "from ignorant efforts made to preserve what is called its purity," and elsewhere the same inexpressible authority reminds us that "the history of language is the history of corruptions," and that "the purest of speakers uses every day with perfect propriety words and forms which, looked at from the point of view of the past, are improper, if not scandalous."—Brander Matthews in Harper's Magazine.
